

The latest photograph of the ZR-2, the huge dirigible built in England for the United States, before its fatal flight last Wednesday. U. S. Navy photo from Underwood & Underwood.

At right—Part of the ZR-2 crew, photographed at Bedford, England, where they had undergone special training. All but six of the trial crew met death in the wreck of the dirigible. Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

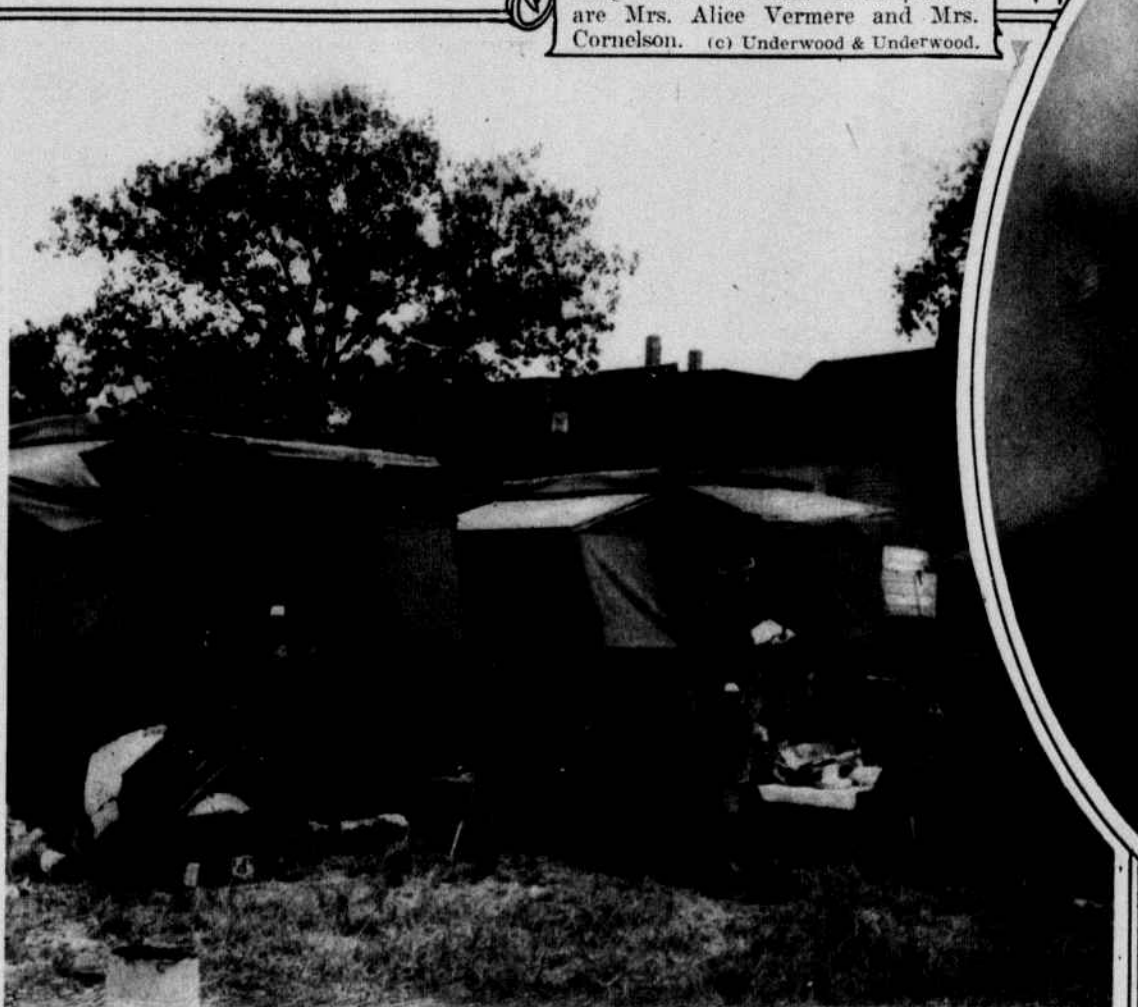

Here is Gen. Ludendorff without his uniform and decorations, but still militant. In a recent speech he urged the Reichswehr and marines to be ready for the next war. (c) Keystone View Co.

Here are the Brooklyn auto caravan travellers, photographed in Chicago, about half way to their destination at Buhl, Idaho. The women are taking advantage of a fine day to hang out a little wash. In the picture are Mrs. Alice Vermere and Mrs. Cornelson. (c) Underwood & Underwood.

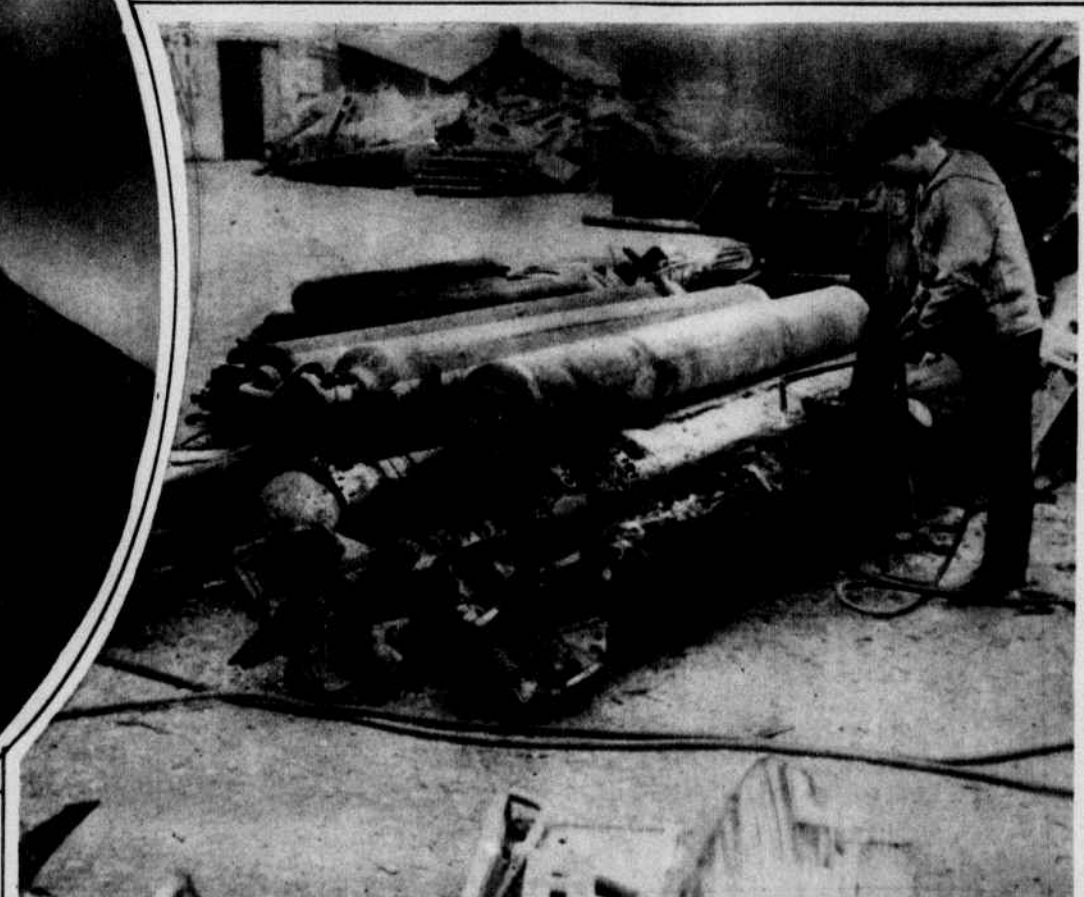

These German citizens have had enough of war. In a great demonstration in front of the Lustgarten in Berlin, thousands of placards were displayed reading: "Nie Wieder Krieg." International.

Men folks of the caravan bound for Idaho have plenty to do when the time comes to make camp. The trailers, shown in the picture, afford shelter and sleeping space at night and by day hold utensils and bedding. (c) Underwood & Underwood.

William J. Burns, appointed by Attorney-General Daugherty to head the Government's Bureau of Investigation. Consolidation of various secret service branches under a single head is part of the Burns programme. (c) Underwood & Underwood.

The acetylene torch cuts up these German torpedoes as easily as sawing a log. They are being converted into junk at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, England, with vast quantities of other war material. Underwood & Underwood.
